The speaker made reference to a "must-read" article. Your boss ordered you to round up pertinent background material for an upcoming presentation. Your students asked for additional sources of information. Oh, yes, and Mom called to tell you to send her a copy of that article you were quoted in five months back. You know the answers all lie in that formidable stack of back issues, but how can you unearth them without spending half a day leafing through magazines? Dig into this guide, and dig yourself out of all those holes.
